He realizado un listado de grandes empresas que han ahorrado multitud de dolares/yenes/euros e infinidad de problemas al migrar sus sistemas informáticos a Linux ...

No estan todas las empresas, pero creo que es un buena representación, con empresas realmente grandes. Además que da una visión global por acertada de hacia donde va el mercado y las empresas.

- Entrum.
  "Entrum, which provides high-speed Internet access for 500,000 private and 70,000 corporate subscribers, said it has replaced 60 different Unix and Windows NT servers from different vendors with a single computer containing 500 virtual servers running Linux software installed by Red Hat and SuSE"

- Can Linux systems be implemented across the enterprise today?
  TechWeb is running a short debate on whether Linux is ready for "enterprise" use. "Each of our stores has a half-dozen computers running Linux. These systems, which provide a variety of services to our customers and associates, are linked via in-store LANs connected to our headquarters. Because of Linux's Unix orientation, the operating system lends itself to remote administration, which has worked well for us. Our stores span 42 states and are staffed by nontechnical people." http://www.internetweek.com/graymatter/point102301.htm[16]
